Remember when computer word processing made all our lives easier and we ditched the typewriter? In 2008, we're on the verge of another major technological transition—one that is going to allow your company to take in more business calls, route them faster and hook your receptionist or dispatcher into applications you've never dreamed of.

The SIT (Solutions for Integrated Telecommunications) console integrates your incoming and outgoing calls with a PC. The result:

- Handle calls 3x faster
- Find the person you're looking for more quickly
- Centralize your directory

And that's just the beginning. SIT ties your front desk into Web applications anywhere in the world. Which means your security people or dispatch centers can integrate their surveillance cameras and their call lists with any crisis plan and notify the right person, right away, with a click of the mouse.

You can also manage employee presence. The console can integrate directly with email sending notifications to find out-of-office employees instantly. Or, send a caller directly to an off-site person's cell. How about calling up instant data reports to reveal who's calling whom and how often. Wouldn't that be helpful information in tracking and analyzing your sales?

Then the next time you're visiting someone else's office and you see an employee put a customer on hold and shuffle through a pile of sticky notes to try to find a number, think about all the calls and sales being taken care of back at your office. And be glad you finally got rid of that old typewriter.

Innovative solutions... proven results.
